

Dear Students,

Meredith College is busy preparing for your safe return to campus. In order to comply with physical distancing requirements we have made some changes to the modality of our courses. You may have already noticed some changes on your Fall 2020 schedule and wondered what they mean. Below is a detailed description of each course modality and a sample of what it looks like in Section Search in Self-Service. If you are using WebAdvisor, there will be some differences in appearance but the terminology will be the same.

Face-to-Face

- This is the traditional classroom setting.
- On the schedule under Meeting Information, it will show the class days, times, building and room.
- You are required to come to campus for this course.

Course Description

This course explores religious meaning in moving images (film or television). It will consider a wide variety of sources - from independent to mainstream Hollywood blockbusters, to television shows and mini-series - and will provide students with background knowledge of a variety of ways religious meaning is constructed and explored in films and television. After introductory readings on film theory, students will critically assess the form and content of films and/or television shows selected from different eras, cultures, or religious perspectives to explore how the moving image can give rise to religious meaning.

Additional Information

This is a Hybrid class.

Online Synchronous (sometimes called remote)

- This is an online class that has real-time course meetings.
- On the schedule under Meeting Information it will say Online Learning with the class days and times, and under Additional Information it will say 'This is a Synchronous Online class'.
- You are not required to come to campus for this course.
- It is important to note that you will be required to attend class online as you would a face-to-face course. In the example below, the student would virtually attend class on T, TH from 12:30 PM - 1:50 PM.
- Because there is no room assigned, your schedule will say "Room to be Announced" or "TBD".
